The American Builder for January has an excellent article on Home Furnishing as a profession. In speaking of the selection of furniture the writer says:

The selection of furniture, there is no doubt, is one of the most important of those which seems a characteristic of American life. It is a disposition to have everything complete sets and a preference for stiff formal styles and appearance which is not shared by the English. But even the English are coming to realize that it is a hopeful sign that the evidence of the taste of the past is disappearing, and that the taste of the future is beginning to appear. It is not infrequently seen in a drawing room that the different articles of furniture are of different styles and appearances, thus suggesting at once the taste of the past and the taste of the surroundings. When this plan is followed, not only is a more pleasing effect secured, but a saving in expense often results. The furniture is not necessarily of the double grade or class of furniture. To secure the quality and consequent comfort of the furniture, it is usually, depending on the style desired, of the same material, and the amount of labor expended the writer had visited several of the principal furniture establishments of this city.

SELECTING FURNITURE.

The American Builder for January has very sensible article on House Furnishing as "In the selection of furniture, there is one fault which seems a characteristic of Americans; a disposition to have everything complete sets, and a preference for stiff formality, which even the English do not exhibit. It is a hopeful sign that the evidence of this taste are fast disappearing, and now not infrequently one's drawing room, where the different articles of furniture, distributed in style and appearance, while preserving at the same time a perfect wash to the surroundings. When this plan followed, not only is a more pleasing effect produced, but a saving in expense effected, since the buyer is not restricted to a particular grade or class of furniture. The variation in the quality and consequent cost of furniture is unlimited, depending, of course, entirely upon the kind of wood employed, and the amount of labor expended

The writer had visited several of the principal furniture establishments of this city.

Parlor—Parlor set, six pieces, green oak, $150.00. Marble-top table, $10.00.
Sitting-room—Complete set with rockers, oak, mah. $300.00. Walnut center table, $25.00.
Dining-room—Six chairs, $125.00. Extension table, $12.00.
Chamber—Two sets, imitation chestnut with two mirrors and two Executive mattresses, $40.00.
Bath—Tub and chairs, $30.00.
Bed—Bed tr., $10.00.
Hr.—Hr. tr., $10.00.

The above estimate, it will be seen, does not include some small articles of prior furniture, ornamental rather than practical, usually found in a house; yet, even with these additions, the total cost of furnishing would come under $1500.00. Of course, a class of furniture referred to as such as might be purchased by those possessing high means, but a personal examination of all the articles included, showed them to be reasonable.
